

"It Takes a Thief..."

Once considered one of the world's most prolific jewel thieves by the FBI, George Feder now uses his knowledge of the criminal mind to educate law enforcement and the public on important crime prevention issues. In George's "It Takes a Thief..." presentation, he gives the audience a first-hand account of why he became a jewel thief, how he was successful, how the public can stay safe, and how law enforcement can prevent crime and take down criminals who are still on the loose.

This one hour presentation covers the following:

- The three elements necessary to commit a crime. (Desire, Opportunity, and Ability)
- Stories and anecdotes from George's life of crime, including an inside look at his strong ties with the mafia.
- The steps George took each and every time he conducted a break-in.
- Signs that an apartment complex, condo, or office building may be primed for a break-in.
- Tips on how to spot suspicious activity, and why if something doesn't seem right, it probably isn't.
- Tips for law enforcement on criminal behavior and what suspects will most likely do moments after committing a crime.
- Evidence of how apathy puts people at risk to become victims of crime.
- Stories from George's decade behind bars and why he thinks the recidivism rate is so high in the U.S.

Immediately following the presentation, George will conduct a no-holds-barred Q & A session. No question is off limits.
